editor's note

The days are getting longer, the weather is getting better (we hope) - the time of daffodils and chocolates is nearly upon us!

Let yourself be spoiled this Mother's day and don't worry too much about spoiling your children with Easter eggs and bunnies. And when you're done indulging, we have plenty of suggestions on burning those recently gained calories - just look at our Activities section and the Events Watch. Not sure how to choose among so many activities for kids in your area? There is some advice in Mike Stevenson's article Choosing clubs and classes.

Walking and running through daffodils may prove more than just fun for our readers this year. At a farm near Northwich, local photographer Helen Rae will photograph children in acres of golden daffodil fields to raise much-needed funds for Macmillan Cancer Support. If you'd like to take part in this event, read more in our Charity Corner section.

In the Travel section you can learn about cruising with children - and yes, there is still time to book a cruise for your summer holiday! And for those of you who are well organised and make your plans well in advance, there is always next year to start thinking about. Zoe x

Formal education and out-of-school activities

Within driving distance from your home there will undoubtedly be enough activities to keep most children occupied for every waking minute. However, availability does not mean that we should automatically seek to buy into all of them. What needs to be considered then, when making choices on behalf of our children?

Compulsory provision

In England, the compulsory school starting age is five, but the Government has ensured that the Early Years Foundation Stage curriculum now influences all pre-school provision for three to five year olds. Our early year's system is among the most formalized in Europe and contrasts with most countries where the starting age for compulsory education is six or seven. A recent report found that young children were not receiving the play-based education they are supposed to, because even nursery teachers now feel pressured to prioritise achievements in numeracy, literacy, and familiarity with 'proper school' routines. So parents must take account of the benefits and costs of participating in the variety of clubs and classes available to their pre-school children.

Do out-of-school activities make a difference?

Certainly, out-of-hours clubs and activities are good for improving children's self-confidence. Generations of children in this country have thrived on activities provided, for example, by Rainbows, Beavers, Cubs and Brownies. On the other hand, the press now reports parents enrolling their children in too many activities, or putting too much pressure on them to do well! We hear of the problems caused by "pushy parents", some of whom are reported to be driving up to 250 miles a week simply to ferry their offspring around a multitude of recreational classes! A recent newspaper report described a 10 year old who spends 50 hours each week in out of school activities which cost her parents £6000 a year! However, when a survey asked parents if they thought that children did too many out of school activities, 60% of them said 'Yes!' Being bored has, after all, provided the stimulus for some of civilization's most creative inventions.

It can be difficult to know where to strike the balance. We know that most children benefit from experiencing a range of activities. We know that our children are involved in formal school systems earlier than in most other countries. We know that the school system is perhaps tilting its balance too far away from young children's need for structured play activities. We don't want to be guilty of pushing our young children into unsuitable activities, yet we do want them to benefit from some of the opportunities on offer. So where can we start to make sense of it all?

Are they good for preschool children?

It is important to differentiate between the informal provision of recreational activities and the need for the more formal supportive provision given by private tuition. For informal provision parents might wish to give more consideration to their children's 'wants', while wishing to be somewhat more prescriptive in determining what their child's needs are for more formal support.

If children are to grow up as happy, balanced and participating people, they need love, time and attention from the adults in their lives. Human history tells us the best body for providing that care is the family. We also want to be the models our children imitate in everything they do and learn. But what if you feel that your child is a natural dancer and you are more of a footballer? What if your child is a budding Mozart and you can barely sing Happy Birthday? We simply can't be the most competent models for everything our children will engage in!

So perhaps the answer is to introduce our pre-schoolers, very gently and gradually to the wider world of activity classes, run by experts, but carefully selected and monitored by us. Then, as they grow and become more capable, to allow that contact slowly to increase as we and they feel it appropriate to take on more.

Making a choice

First, be sure that you really feel that your child might be ready to benefit from recreational classes. Then, choose a class which will do the following:

- extend and enrich an existing talent or skill shown by your child
- reinforce and support activities in which the child needs extra attention
- provide aspects that are missing from the rest of the child's experience, (eg. fitting into larger groups for an only child).

Choose a class which provides a range of activities and experiences in each session. Above all, make sure that your child enjoys the activities, and wants to participate. Then insist that joining means giving the experience a proper try out. We always stipulated that anything joined had to be stuck at for at least a school term, so no early 'drop-outs' were considered! Then attend a 'taster session' to satisfy yourself that those in charge:

- Observe and recognise the different personalities and developmental stages of the children they work with
- Encourage the children to speak to each other, their parents, and adult leaders about what they are doing
- Recognise and celebrate individual differences and diversity
- Encourage children to observe, question and extend what they experience
- Challenge children to think, rather than train them to conform
- Engage children in challenging activities rather than time-filling ones
- Help children to make informed choices
- Foster healthy attitudes to issues like diet, exercise, sleep etc.
- Respect parental wishes and encourage their involvement
- Encourage co-operation and equality among the groups they work with
- Encourage respect for others and the natural and made environments.

Tumble Tots in a nutshell

Tumble Tots is Britain's leading active physical programme designed to develop children's agility, balance, co-ordination and climbing, whilst developing their sense of self-confidence and independence.

Each 45 minute weekly session combines fun, excitement and challenges in a safe and caring environment. All sessions use unique equipment and are run by staff specially trained to get the best out of your child.

In order to meet the physical and developmental needs of the children the equipment layouts and class formats are specific for each age group. Every two weeks the equipment layouts are changed to encourage new skills. Classes for children up to age 2 are based around a free play concept. From the age of two, the equipment is arranged in four groups or 'stations', each focusing on a different skill: climbing, balance, agility and co-ordination.

Staff are friendly and are there to help and encourage the children whilst on the apparatus and make sure that everything is used safely whilst having lots of fun! They are fully trained and DBS checked and are passionate about working with children. Your local friendly Tumble Tots Franchisees are Sue and Gill in Bramhall, Cheadle & The Heaton and Jane in Trafford, South Manchester, Lymm & Knutsford.

Testing the water

by Paul Wojnicki

view from Mount Ulia

Spider outside Guggenheim Museum

I'd been toying with the idea of taking the kids on a cruise for a while, but wasn't sure how they'd cope with being on a boat for so long. Cruises do represent excellent value for money, but only if your children don't spend the entire holiday throwing up.

So last spring we tested the water - pun intended - by taking a Brittany Ferries cruise-ferry from Portsmouth to northern Spain.

The Bay of Biscay comes with something of a reputation for large waves at times. But there's a plus side to this route as well: the abundance of large mammals such as whales and dolphins and a team of spotters watching out for them, ready to alert the eager passengers - especially children - as soon as they're sighted.

The south-bound crossing involved neither of the above for us. The Bay barely had a ripple on it and we also seemed to miss every single wildlife sighting. Harrison did manage to spot the ship's indoor play park though, complete with sea-saw, slide, roundabout and climbing frames; and it felt as though we spent every waking minute of the crossing there, with six month old Ella excitedly cheering him on. Luckily there was a cafe next door so we didn't have to drag them away from it - kicking and screaming - to eat.

Had we sailed in the summer, rather than March, we might have enjoyed the pool as well. But I guess the unpredictability of The Bay means that the pool has to remain closed in the winter.

Alena and I were relieved to sight land the following day, as it meant we'd be leaving the play-park behind for a few days, but also because we were excited about the itinerary ahead. Beginning with the unlikely industrial port city of Bilbao.

On the face of it, that probably doesn't sound particularly appealing to parents of young children, but while Bilbao is undoubtedly industrial it's also surrounded by mountains, and - being a port - is very close to the sea. Bilbao is also home to the world famous Guggenheim Museum. The word museum might strike fear into the hearts of parents with younger children but we spent several hours enjoying the outside of the museum, which was completely free of charge and had lots of interesting oddities for the children to marvel at.

The giant metallic spider was one of the highlights; it looks like it belongs on the set of a sci-fi film rather than a museum and which kids of all ages will find it a lot more interesting than the statues back home. Our kids were also fascinated by the giant floral West Highland Terrier and the dancing fountains; indeed it was almost as hard to drag Harrison from the latter as it was from that play-park on the ferry.

Having finally bribed him into returning to the car we headed to nearby Bermeo and enjoyed a spot of lunch before hiking, around a mile, to the unpronounceable Gaztelugatze. It's a little difficult to put into words how amazing Gaztelugatze actually is but I'll try anyway. Imagine a section of the Great Wall of China thrusting toward a 14th century chapel on an islet in the Bay of Biscay and imagine having this virtually to yourself. Ella slept though the entire visit but Harrison had the time of his life invading the island and running along the sea-walls for over an hour - that's a lot safer than it sounds by the way!

The following morning we drove an hour along the coast, through a scenic Pyrenean motorway to San Sebastian, which is regularly voted as having one of the best city beaches in Europe, it's also famous for its food and the abundance of Michelin starred restaurants. Needless to say children prefer the beach to Michelin starred bistros, or at least our children do. And we spent the next few days playing endlessly in the sand, though we did manage a side trip by funicular up Mount Ulia, to take in the stupendous views of the beaches we'd been playing on below. The view is not dissimilar to images of Rio de Janeiro and there's even a statue of Christ on nearby Urgill Hill - but Harrison was more interested in the permanent funfair that lives at the summit and Ella had fun laughing at him going round and round on the rides.

Waving goodbye to San Sebastian we headed across the border to the French city of Biarritz for another few days of sand and sea. It actually felt more as though we'd driven to California than France though as the sea front was teeming with nothing but surfers for around two miles or so along Plage de la Cote des Basques that runs back toward Spain, indeed the whole vibe here is more Californian than virtually anywhere else in Europe. The waves and water temperature at this time of year were too dangerous to let the children paddle in but the beach was incredibly wide and we did manage to find a large safe tidal pool for Harrison to splash around in and Ella to dip her little toes.

Dune of Pilat

Medoc

We spent the next few days exploring a number of secluded coves and surf beaches in the city, and found an islet even smaller than the one at Gaztelugatze, though the bridge was less impressive. The highlight of our next few days in France though was the Dune du Pilat further up the Atlantic coast. This massive sand dune is the largest in Europe at 2.7km long, 500m wide and 110m in high. It's a tremendous sight and wouldn't look out of place in Saudi Arabia, were it not for the longest forest in Europe sitting behind the largest sand dune. You could easily spend a week in the area without getting bored, particularly as there are dozens of great campsites around. But alas, we had only a day there, so we've resolved to return again in a year or so.

The return journey was - a tad disappointingly - flat calm again, so we learned nothing about how the kids would handle a week long cruise in choppy seas. Still, we did spot a distant pod of whales and of course the play park, so Harrison has decided that we have to come by ferry again next time!

Inspiring Science - Inspiring Children

in the Easter & Summer Holidays

'If I have any ability it is the ability to learn from scientists and talk to children,' says Philip Rose, the founder of SciTECH, an organisation that for 25 years has brought the most amazing science experiences to children. Philip explains that this ability stems from his imagination which he claims 'never really grew up!'

The Easter Programme SciTECH:+1, runs on Wednesday April 5th, 6th and 7th. This year children will be one of the pit stop crew as part of their Formula1 day, design, build and program a Lego NXT lunar rover as part of their robotics day and as part of their Science of Sound day, use an explosion to measure the speed of sound!

The Summer programme SciTECH: 17, is even more spectacular! This year the five -day programme starts on July 31st and again on August 4th, 2017. The South Manchester venue is yet to be confirmed and so the final parts of the programme also need to be confirmed but they do say that this year the children will be setting up collisions with cars and crash test dummies as part of the Car Crash Technology day, using surgical microscopes as part of their Ophthalmology Day. On their Perception and Illusion day they get to experience life in an upside down room as they learn the science of magic. There is a Spy Technology day too but apparently if they tell you about it they will have to... The plan for the fifth day is still under wraps until the venue is chosen.

To find out more about the Easter and summer programmes, please visit: www.scitech.co.uk or email them on admin@scitech.co.uk or telephone 0161 903 9133, available during office hours, evening and weekends.

'Mummies aren't meant to cry' by Sandi Mann

These rather poignant words were uttered by a tearful 38 year old woman at my Manchester clinic. She was in fact quoting her bewildered youngest child who had found her bawling her eyes out one afternoon when everything just got too much.

Depression in mums is surprisingly common, yet very much overlooked. Postnatal depression, quite rightly, is widely recognised now, with health visitors and midwives trained to look for signs and symptoms. But depression amongst mums of older children is also prevalent; in fact, Australian research in 2014 suggests that mothers are twice as likely to suffer from depression when their child is four years old than when they are a new baby. Later onset 'mummy depression' tends to be under-reported due to lack of awareness; many of the mums that I treat at my clinic are convinced that they are the only mums in the playground fighting this terrible condition.

People generally don't talk about mental illness much, but I think mums are even less likely than most to talk about depression. Most of the mums I see in my clinic feel terribly guilty about their low mood and there is a strong feeling that they 'shouldn't' be feeling the way they do. The conviction is that if they have healthy kids and can manage financially, then they have no right to feel down.

Indeed, many of the mums who come to me do have all that - and more. Many are financially secure, have delightful children, active social lives, holidays abroad... they seem to have it all. Yet they are still depressed - and overwhelmed with guilt at feeling so.

Part of the cause of a lot of depression these days is social comparison and never has this been more prevalent than in a world dominated by social media. In the old days, the only lives we had to compare with were those of our immediate neighbours - and, being in the same socio-economic group (probably) they tended to live pretty similar lives to us. Bar the odd 11 plus success, seaside destination or new-fangled household gadget, the lives of our parents and grandparents would not have been a million miles away from those of the people they mixed with.

Nowadays, thanks to Facebook and other social media, it is all so different. Our lives are so public - and on social media, we can see the successes and achievements of a much wider variety of people, many of whom seem to enjoy lives that are far more fun, exciting, productive and adventurous than our own. Uber-Mums, with sparkling careers, boast of their kids' every achievement, as well as each minute detail of their hectic social lives. It is easy to feel that everyone else is living the dream, with the perfect career, partner, home, holidays, and, of course, kids.

The reality is often far more different - in fact, it is often those most prolific posters who are the most insecure about their lives. An alarming number of mums feel that the rather more humdrum lives than they care to admit to publically, don't match those of everyone else's. Add to this the pressure to be the 'perfect' mum (a report in 2013 suggested that 22% of new mothers felt pressure to get things right) as mums are pelted with parenting advice from all sides about everything from diet, extra-curricular activities, stimulation, toys and discipline - it is no wonder that many mums feel disheartened in their attempts to get it right. The leap to feeling inadequate and being plagued by low self-esteem is clear - and these feelings can easily lead to a spiralling into depression.

Studies suggest that financial worries can also be a big factor for some whilst the stress and strain of juggling work and family life can also be contributors to depression. Stay-at-home mums may, in fact, struggle more than working mums; according to a survey of 60 000 mums in America, 28% of stay at home mums reported depression 'a lot of the day' compared with 17% of employed mums. It is thought that isolation, lack of appreciation and lack of accomplishment are factors that lead to the home-mums being so vulnerable to depression.

Any mums who are experiencing symptoms of depression (such as crying a lot, struggling to make decisions, spending daytime in bed or slumped in front of the TV, feeling worthless, constantly comparing themselves unfavourably to others etc) should know they are not alone. There is no shame in feeling this way and there should be no embarrassment about seeking help, either from friends, self-help books or even professional input (via your GP or a private therapist).

Perhaps mummies aren't meant to cry - but they do. Everyone gets down at times, but if these feelings are frequent or are very severe, it is time to do something about it.

Mama's Pies - a gourmet twist on traditional

nb: all Mama's pies are made exclusively from halal meat

What better name for a family business in the food industry than Mama's Pie Kitchen. What better twist on conventional than combining two traditions? Mama's Pie is a new service in Manchester that delivers mouthwatering pies straight to your oven.

Managing director, Noor Ali, explains, "From our kitchen to your oven: the pies take around 25-30 minutes (from frozen) baking time in the oven. We prepare, fill and freeze our pies within a strict time-scale to ensure 100% fresh and flavoursome food. As we are a family business we aim to provide wholesome meals for other families in the area, here at Mama's Pies we understand that after a long day people may want a quick fix dinner, and we aim to provide this at the highest standard."

Their pies are certainly a 'twist' on traditional as each pie is filled with fragrant family curry recipes, that have been adapted and perfected after being passed down through generations. Head chef, Ambreen Ali, says, "I really wanted to create a dish that captured elements from both eastern and western traditions, so I created a pie! It is something new for families to try at home and as a parent you sometimes want an easy dinner but at the same time you don't want to feed the children a load of chemicals."

The ingredients Mama's Pie Kitchen uses are all sourced locally and selected with care. No chemicals or preservatives added, just clean, home-made, and tasty food. Perfect for a pie night in for you and your family or as a fuss free option when hosting dinner parties or events.

If that sounds like a delicious and easy family dinner or party option, please call 07479 550063 or email mamashomecooking2016@gmail.com to have a chat with Noor and to place an order.

Think Cubic

Design & Decoration

The most common scenario we discuss with clients is that almost everyone wants just a little more space in their house for something: a new arrival, playroom, den, office, storage, spare room, the list goes on.

Often, Spring prompts people to embark on a project and, if budget allows, this niggling thought will start to take shape as an extension or conversion plan and here at nest we can fully support this being a brilliant idea. What we would say is, before deciding on your final plan, think cubic in terms of m². Give your house a good look up and down and consider the often spacious and under-utilised spaces of your loft and cellar, if you are lucky enough to have both. This way, you don't eat into your garden space but can still add both an extra room(s) and value to your home. Another bonus is that often the bulk of the inevitably messy work can be contained and contractor access can often be via the roof or cellar light-well - avoiding the frustration of your front door being constantly open for a good couple of months! Cellars naturally lend themselves to creating cosy and inviting rooms, think a spare bedroom, teenage den or playroom. Lofts offer great opportunities for bright and airy home offices, see images for our very own sunny nest office, or an indulgent sanctuary at the top of the house in the form of a master bedroom/en-suite. Often, particularly in period houses where loft spaces are divided into front and rear, there is the opportunity to retain a part of the loft for much-needed storage. If you are creating an extra bedroom in either area then it is worth adding an extra WC/shower room, however compact, if space allows. This will ensure that your ratio of bedrooms to bathrooms still works well and will further increase re-sale value. Always do your research before employing a building firm to work with, take up testimonials, visit previous projects and ensure both building regulations and planning permission are in hand, where required. An architect is invaluable, often costs less than you would imagine and will offer ideas in terms of layout, space planning, ensuring natural light and linking to the original part of the house which will make the difference between a standard space and a brilliantly planned new space. nest have worked on a number of similar projects and can both recommend all relevant contractors and work with you to ensure your new space is tailored to your requirements. Just get in touch for an initial chat and quote M&D Spring for 10% off initial consultancy fees.

Born to Read

Are you looking for a new challenge in 2017?

Save the Children recently launched their report: Untapped potential: How England's nursery lottery is failing too many children which focused on support for early child development. There was wide media coverage on this issue. If a child is already behind in their development when they start primary school they are more likely to be behind not just throughout school, but for the rest of their lives.

Across Greater Manchester there are opportunities for local residents to give back to their community and volunteer for Born to Read, a partnership between Save the Children and Beanstalk. The charities help children improve their reading and are looking for members of the local community who could spare some time sharing their love of books with pupils.

Born to Read trains volunteers to read with children on a one-to-one basis developing their skills and confidence. Research by the Read On. Get On. campaign, of which Save the Children and Beanstalk are both part of, revealed a quarter of all children leave primary education without reading well each year, with poorer children nearly twice as likely to fall behind. Not being able to read can have a devastating impact on their life chances, so early intervention is vital.

Desiree, a local Born to Read reading helper in Manchester, said: "I wanted to do some voluntary work and I really like children so I thought when I heard about this it interested me because it was more than just listening to children read, it's about trying to introduce children into reading for their life's, to enjoy reading."

Schools across Greater Manchester are looking for new Born to Read volunteers to support children in primary school that have fallen behind in their language and literacy. Potential volunteers must be able to commit to visit schools twice a week during term time and will receive specially designed training so they can deliver one-to-one reading support to primary school children.

Portraits with daffodils

Children's photographer Helen Rae helps to raise funds for Macmillan Cancer Support

Someone once said 'When I see a daffodil it's so hard not to smile'. So imagine having exclusive access to fields full of the golden beauties!

This Spring, Cheshire children's photographer, Helen Rae, will join forces for the second year running with Daffodil Walks near Northwich to help raise funds for Macmillan Cancer Support, the UK's leading source of cancer care.

There are thousands of daffodils to see, walk and even run through at Foxwist Green Farm near Northwich and exclusive mini portrait sessions will be held on 7th and 10th April 2017. Helen of Helen Rae Photography will photograph children in acres of golden daffodil fields to raise much-needed funds for Macmillan Cancer Support. Each 20-minute photo session includes a package of prints and digital images, with all profits going to the charity.

A daffodil session is suitable for children from 7 months (sitting baby) to 12 years old and further details are available on Helen's website. Last year Helen and her clients raised £1200 as part of a £7200 donation from The Daffodil Walks to Macmillan. The Daffodil Walks happen annually at Foxwist Green Farm in the heart of Vale Royal in Cheshire, in the village of Whitegate, and were begun back in 2005 by retired farmer and daffodil expert, Len Tomlinson, after he lost a close friend to cancer. Now, the Daffodil Walks regularly raise around £7000 per year for Macmillan Cancer Support. Daffodil Walks in 2017 are from 29th March to 9th April.

Helen Rae is a children's and family photographer, working in beautiful locations across Cheshire. Known for her ability to capture natural expressions and for her ease with her child subjects, Helen is a published photographer with work displayed in clients' homes throughout the world.

All bookings for Daffodil Mini Sessions must be made in advance by emailing enquiries@helenraephoto.com or on the website at www.helenraephoto.com/portraits-in-daffodils-macmillan www.daffodilwalks.com / www.macmillan.org.uk www.helenraephoto.com

Putting your children first when separating

Chris Fairhurst,
Principal Lawyer,
Family Team
Slater and Gordon

A child's welfare is the family court's paramount concern when it comes to deciding arrangements after separation.

As society changes, with fewer of us identifying with the traditional nuclear family, splits and divorces can be more complicated and family courts are increasingly being asked to resolve issues.

Here are a few answers to frequently asked questions which will explain some of the processes and terms:

Q: How do I Get Parental Responsibility?

You automatically have Parental Responsibility if you are a mum; and if you are dad, you have it if you were married to mum when the child was born, or if not you can obtain it through a Parental Responsibility Order. You also have it if you subsequently get married or have re-registered your child's birth on or after 1 December 2003.

Other people can secure it such as in the event of Adoption, obtaining an Order or being the child's Guardian.

Q: How do I apply for an Order?

There is a principle of non-intervention of the court, meaning it will only get involved if parents can't agree.

In most circumstances before anyone can apply to the court for an order you have to attempt to resolve matters.

This usually means attending a Mediation Information and Assessment Meeting (MIAM) to see if mediation might be one way to get parents talking and keep matters out of court.

Parents may wish to try and resolve matters more informally, perhaps with trusted family members or friends to assist with anything that might be considered an obstacle. Mediation is not obligatory in situations involving potential harm to a child or where domestic abuse might feature.

Q: What if mediation doesn't work?

If it is really necessary, you may wish to make an application to court. This might be in relation to when and where a child should live or spend time with a parent, a Specific Issue Order such as which school a child should attend, a Prohibited Steps Order, which could prevent removal of a child from United Kingdom, or any other relevant order to a child's upbringing.

If an application is made to court then CAFCASS will be asked to undertake a safeguarding check which involves contacting social work agencies and the police about any information held before the first court hearing, to make sure there is nothing which might impact upon the child's welfare and therefore the court's decision making.

Q: What is CAFCASS?

It's the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service, which is independent of the court, social services and other similar agencies. It may be asked by the court in the more serious cases to provide information about a family and guidance as to how the court should exercise its powers. It seeks to provide a voice to the child in line with the court's need to take account of a child's "ascertainable wishes and feelings" in any decision. The court will be guided by any recommendation made by CAFCASS or give good reasons if not doing so.

Q: Does the court always go in favour of the mother?

The family court is even handed in its approach and decisions are made with the best interests of the children in mind.

We believe it is important that you seek legal advice during this process. The award winning team I work with have years of experience representing parents who are going through children disputes to secure the best possible outcome.
